Annoyed Animals

William Martin was head of the city zoo. He was a stout man and wore rimless eyeglasses. Just now he was in his office talking to Bill Jameson, star reporter of the Herald-News.

"We are all grateful to you and your paper. It was your great publicity campaign that helped us get the mayor to give us an increase in the City Budget. Now we will be able to build a special zoo section only for children. This is something I have dreamed about for years. Is there anything I can do for you in return?"

Suddenly a little squirrel appeared on the window sill. He jumped from there to a chair, to the floor, and then ran to the door.

"John Simpson is in the third room to the left," said Mr. Martin. "He expects you. Now don't worry a bit. We are going to take care of your protest meeting."

The squirrel then turned around and ran across the room. A door was partly opened and the little creature vanished into an adjoining hall. The reporter gulped before speaking.

"I don't believe what I saw and heard. So you are beginning to talk to the animals here. My little niece wants to know if it is true that this young zoo keeper who works here really speaks to the animals and the birds?"

Mr. Martin forced a smile to appear on his face. He folded his two hands on the desk and then replied.

"Everybody asks me the same question. Maybe I should have cards printed with the answer. There is a simple way for you to find out if this is really so. Go and ask John Simpson and then watch him with the animals. Where is he? You heard the direction I gave to the squirrel. Certainly you can follow them."

The reporter arose from his seat. He went into the hall and then walked slowly to the third room on the left. The door was opened. He saw a young man on his desk holding several sheets of paper in his hand. The little squirrel was looking at them.

"Now don't worry at all," said Mr. Simpson. "I promised you we would take care of the matter. There is the reporter from the Herald-News. I shall give him the sheets and he will print the complaint in his paper. The public will read it. The children will all believe it and that is what counts. Come on in, Mr. Jameson. I have something for you. Sit down on this chair to the left of my desk."

The reporter entered and sat down. The young zoo keeper handed him several sheets of paper with a gentle order.

"Please read these. Then have the story printed in your newspaper. It will help all of us. We can't have a happy zoo unless the inhabitants here are all contented. They have some complaints. And they have to be remedied."

The reporter quickly read what was typed on the sheets and then placed them on the desk.

"I don't believe it. I just can't believe it."

Squarro the Squirrel pushed the sheets apart. Then he took one sheet in his mouth and handed the sheet to Mr. Simpson. The young zoo keeper took the sheet and looked at the number on top of the sheet. Then he laughed as he handed the sheet back to the reporter.

"You were reading sheet five after sheet three. Guess you were a bit puzzled. Shows you how observant Squarro the Squirrel is. He spotted it. Now read the story as it goes in sequence."

The reporter reread the story with his mouth half opened. He looked at the squirrel and then patted him on his head.

"I promise faithfully to you, Squarro the Squirrel, and to all your friends in this city zoo, that this story shall appear in the issue of our paper that appears on the stands this coming Wednesday. I know it will make things better for all of you."

So here is the story that was published in the newspaper — word for word, as Squarro the Squirrel gave it to Mr. Simpson, who then typed the story and gave it to the reporter.

"My name is Squarro the Squirrel. I'm the fellow with the big bushy tail. It has a white streak running the entire length so you can always recognize me. My cousin, Bushy the Squirrel, has no such color design on his tail. Not that I am vain, but it really makes me look distinguished."

I was elected chairman of the Grievance Committee of the Animals, Birds, and the other inhabitants of the City Zoo. We have one big complaint to make. We think that most of you humans need to have a bit more understanding and consideration for us. Especially when you visit the zoo on Saturday, Sunday and other Legal holidays. It is crowded and we have to work overtime with no pay for it.

Sobo the Seal, on behalf of the Seals that live in the big pool on the east side of the Administration Building, presents his basic complaint. The Seals do not like to be teased by either children or adults. You can buy a fish for five cents. Then we expect you to throw the fish to the Seals right away. Don't dangle the fish in your hand. Don't start to throw the fish and change your mind. Don't look at one Seal and throw the fish to another Seal. This causes hard feelings among the Seals. And never, never make a crack about how warm a Seal skin coat is in the winter. How would you feel if we made a crack about your skin?

Don't whistle or make loud noises. Please do not put the little children on the railings. Only one Seal, Showoff, has his life saving senior certificate. He loves to show us how quickly he can do a rescue job. So watch your kid, watching our feelings, and every person and animal will feel happy. This includes Max who sells the fish. Don't argue with him about getting a bigger fish for your five cents. Take what he gives you. We get it anyway.

Leo the Leopard, on behalf of the Leopards, Lions, and Tigers, who have their cages in the third building on the right side of the Elephant house, presents his basic complaint. We are all rather peaceful creatures. We don't miss the jungle for the simple reason we never were there. We were all born in the City Zoo. We enjoy three square meals a day. You fellows with the cameras and the flash bulbs please have a heart. You keep on flashing and flashing. It annoys us a lot. We can't even get forty winks. Go buy a picture of any one of us in the Administration Building. Costs only fifteen cents. The chances are you'll get a bad picture of us from outside where you stand. So save the roll of film in your camera.

Don't speak in a loud voice so everyone can hear you say that we animals are fierce. We are gentle. Think of us as overgrown kittens and that should do the trick. Never, never say anything about a rug made from our skin. That gets our goat. We could pass a few wise cracks ourselves. But then we have all read Leeny the Lion's book on proper manners.

Ellie the Elephant, on behalf of the Elephants, Hippos and the Camels, presents her basic complaint. Just stop those old jokes. They are so worn out it is time to get a few new ones. What has happened to originality? Why must one person remark to another that an Elephant always is prepared to go on a trip because he or she carries the trunk with them? Why must some auto owner always remark that here is the perfect set-up for an auto washing business? As for the poor camels, they really can no longer stand your old jokes that have been repeated for almost a century. We offer a prize of ten dollars to the person who can think up a new joke — and not tell it to anybody.

Squarro the Squirrel, on behalf of all the squirrels that run around the zoo, presents his basic complaint. When you buy a bag of peanuts, who is to get them? It is terrible for us to watch a little boy open his bag of peanuts and eat every one of them. You parents should be careful. The youngster may get indigestion. So here is a simple rule for all parents to follow. Have your youngster open the bag. One peanut for himself, one peanut for the squirrel. If you want some peanuts, go buy a bag of them yourself from Oscar the Peanut Vendor. Only ten cents a bag. He has good peanuts. We do not pick up the peanuts and sell them back to Oscar. This is the untruth! Slimey the Snake probably is the one who spread the story.

A bit of manners for children. All peanuts on the ground, whether on our side of the fence, or the other side, belong to the squirrels. Leave them on the ground. Do not step on them. We have a peanut-pick up squad that takes care of the situation. We are willing to stand on our hind legs. We are willing to wag our tails. But you just be certain to throw us the peanut. Don't tease us and eat it yourself.

We know that these are reasonable complaints and we are certain that you humans will give them your fullest consideration. So when you come to the zoo next time, we will put on our best show for all of you. Just one thing more for the parents: Hold tightly onto the hands of your children. Don't lose them. No more free ice cream for lost kids!"
